Guest Speaker Dave Kempton

The science behind climate change is clear: it's real, it's happening, it's a crisis, and we are the cause. This talk will briefly present some of the scientific evidence for climate change, and some of the effects it is having and how those effects may change over the next few decades. Since those mainly causing climate change are in the wealthiest parts of the world, while those suffering the worst effects are generally in some of the poorest, there are important ethical issues to be considered. Of course, there is hope from technical, policy and economic developments, which will also be discussed.
